This experience cured him of all regard for the girl, and after he was discharged he thought he had done with her, the more so as he had paid $100 to patch the matter up.

Annie recently heard that her recreant lover was paying attention to another girl. Thereupon she armed herself with an antiquated revolver and started out for vengeance. It was on July 18 that she found him with a number of friends on the corner of Ewen and Johnson streets and began to remonstrate strongiy with him on the error of his ways.

After calling him all the names that an angry woman could think of without effect, she wound up with threatening to blow the top of his head off if he did not give up the new love. Then Rossell had her arrested.

She was placed under bonds to keep the peace until the time of trial.

Some strange boys then arrived and combed up the tree Johnson gathered up some of the cherries they shoom down. This enraged the boys, and, descending, they gave him a beating, and one of them, it is alleged, kicked Johnson violently in the stomach. He fainted, and was picked up and sent home by a strange man.

HAD TO ARREST HIM.

Bellevue Officials Otherwise Wouldn't Take in John Fry.

Was Crazy from Drink, "But It Wasn't a Hospital Case."

On the Second Trip Policeman Morris Takes Decided Action.

The unusual action of the authorities of Bellevue Hospital in refusing to receive an intoxicated man who threatened to do harm to himself and others caused great excitement last night in the vicinity of Fourteenth street and First ave nue and gave Policeman Morris no end

At 10 o'clock a woman ran out of the house at 512 East Fourteenth street, and, meeting Policeman Morris, asked him to an excited way that she believed the man was crazy-she was sure he was drunk. Accompanying the woman to the third floor of the house, the policeman found John Fry, thirty-four years old, a cattleship man, being held down on the floor by two men. As he was held there, struggling, Fry cried aloud that he must get up and "follow the ice-wagon full of beef" The two men said they were friends of the man; that he was franks, and they feared to release him.

Morns thed to quiet Fry, but was un-able to do so. Mrs. Fry and her two children were badly frightened, and implored the policeman to take the man away. Finally Morris decided to call an ambulance from Bellevue Hospital. Until the conveyance came Fry up a continual and howling demand for the ice wagon and the beef. The police man couldn't decide whether or not the man couldn't decide whether or not the man was crazy, and as there was no cause to do so did not make him a prisoner. All the way to the hospital Fry had to be sat upon by the surgeon to keep him from throwing himself from the ambulance.

Foliceman Morris patrolled his post towards the Fifth street station-house, where he reported the case.

At 11.30 o'clock the policeman was again near Fourteenth street and First avenue, when he saw a big crowd in Fourteenth street. As he hurried to see what caused the gathering he asked of a man "What's the matter?" and received this answer:

"Oh, nothing; only a man who wants an ice-wagon filled with beef."

"What, another!" cried Morris. Then he ran forward and found Fry in his night clothes, dancing on the pavement, much to the amusement of the crowd, and all the time crying for the ice wagon.

The policeman didn't understand the wagon.

The policeman didn't understand the matter at all. Then Mrs. Fry came and told that an hour after her husband had been taken to the hospital in his frantic state he had returned, more violent than ever. He had scarcely been in the house ten minutes, when he made an effort to throw himself from the third-story window.

The ambulance surgeon came again and brought the explanation of the man's return. The hospital had refused to receive Fry because he was not a prisoner.

"But," said the policeman, "the man is frantic. I don't know what is the matter with him."

"Well, arrest him and I'll take him away," said the surgeon.

"But I have nothing to arrest him for," argued Morris. "His wife wants him taken to the hospital for treatment."

"You'll have to arrest him then."

So Morris arrested the man, and he was taken once again to the hospital. This time they were compelled to receive him. It was said there that the man was only drunk and that he had oeen placed in the alcoholic ward.
